You and your friends are cordially invited to visit the garden while the Iris are at their best - April twenty-second to May eighth.

FOREWORD

The cordial reception given our initial price-list has made us feel that Green Gate Garden has a place all its own to fill in the flower world. We have added since last season one hundred varieties of Iris to our former large collection, many of them interesting high priced novelties, of which we are very proud. These are excellent for specimen clumps or groups but we recommend again the vigorous, floriferous, older standard sorts for landscape effect in mass. We have in addition three hundred and fifty seedlings of our own crossing, to bloom this Spring.

We have given, where possible, the rating of each variety as determined by the American Iris Society and we can guarantee that there is not an Iris on our list that has not its good points and some particular individual charm.

The best time to divide and transplant the Bearded Iris is after the blooming season - with us in June and July, though these Iris can be safely planted at any time. Plant them in good garden soil, in well drained and sunny location, and fertilize with Bone Meal twice a year. Siberian and Orientalis Iris should be transplanted when dormant in late Fall, Winter, or early Spring. They do well in partial shade and like more moisture than the Bearded kind, but thrive in dry situations also. Use no lime with these. Spanish Iris are bulbous, multiply rapidly, and should be divided every three years after the foliage dies, then dried out and replanted in early Fall, fertilizing with Bone Meal at this time.

We have endeavored to set a fair and reasonable price on all our Iris and will be ready to ship at these 1928 prices - greatly reduced from last year - good healthy roots by June first. Order as early as possible to get a full year's growth and free bloom next season.

Roots will be shipped by Express. If wanted Parcel Post, add 5 per cent.

NOTES

Varieties I must have:

Iris planted too deep will not bloom. Let the top of the rhizome show the least bit above ground and let the small roots go deep.

Some varieties are temperamental and refuse to bloom the first season after moving; the chances are better for June and July transplanting.

We ship Iris the year round.
